The Summer School aims at bringing together students and researchers in humanities and social sciences with an interest in borders and migration. The program is designed to combine theoretical instruction by academic researchers who had made important contributions to the field of migration and border studies with various on-site activities.

The North Eastern Aegean island of Lesbos provides an ideal location for holding this Summer School, as it is currently one of the most important gates of immigrants and refugees to Greece and Europe and the site of a massive humanitarian intervention. The Summer School takes place at the height of the 'European Refugee Crisis' and in times of radical transformation and the reconfiguration of borders in national and international levels. The program aims to address political, ethical, methodological and theoretical questions in this challenging landscape.
